THE OPTIMIST

Tho' days be dark and efforts barred
To do the righteous thing,
And unkind fate and powers ill
Do naught but sorrow bring:
Yet on he strives with firm-set will,
To bring to pass the deed
That deeply moved his spirit long
Ere any would him heed.

Tho' ill-health leaves a shatter'd frame
And feeble life ensues,
And mind that once with vigor thrilled,
Would fain its work excuse:
Yet on he strives thro' toil and pain,
To give the world his best,
That life may never wasted be,
When spirit needs no rest.

Tho' poverty would crush his hopes
To live to ideals seen;
And hardships would his spirit break
By bitter grief most keen:
Yet on he strives, nor heeds the gloom
That doth his life surround,
And keeps undimm'd the soul's true Sight,
Which leads to joys profound.

The Optimist

Tho' strife of sects and many creeds
Would weaken his belief,
And cares of life and ways of men
Bring their full share of grief:
Yet on he strives, with faith in God,
That Truth and Love shall reign,
And Righteousness shall be earth's Law,
That all may true joy gain.

LOVE AND FATE

If thy soul loves the noble thought,
The kindly word and deed,
And loves those realms wherein they dwell
That joy may thy soul feed:
Then shall thy life reflect the thoughts
And deeds which moved thy soul,
And radiate its lovely light,
That cheers and makes life whole.

If thy soul loves ideals most fair
Of service and duty,
And feels the worth of those great lives
Who moulded its beauty:
Then shall thy life o'erflow with zeal
To emulate them, too,
By nobler service everywhere—
More loving and more true.

If thy soul loves the Word of God,
And in it finds thy peace,
Believing that its mighty power,
Alone will make strife cease:
Then shall thy life possess that strength
Which comes from love divine,
And leads the soul to holy heights,
That do earth's joys outshine.

Love and Fate

If thy soul loves the noble mind,
The good, the pure, the true,
The characters of priceless worth,
The Christ-like men so few:
Then shall thy life bear worthy fruit,
In actions small or great,
Which build God's Kingdom in thy soul,
And noble makes thy fate!

PRAYER

PRAY that thy soul may Godward grow! Then shall thy life true riches know, Which gives the soul that peace most blest, That stills the rush of life's unrest, For fame or place, or worldly things, By holy joys the Spirit brings.

Pray that thy soul may Godward grow! For tribulations ceaseless flow, From evil sources deep and strong, That wage their bitter warfare long, Against the good, the just, the pure, That evil powers may endure.

Pray that thy soul may Godward grow! Then will the Holy Spirit sow
The noble thought that blooms in deeds
Of sacrifice for others' needs,
Which shapes the soul to form divine,
Ennobling man with virtue fine.

THE AMBASSADORS OF GOD

Ambassador of God!
Well guardest thou the sacred Truth,
To bless our lives in age and youth,
And pilot us to Heaven's gate,
That perfect bliss may be our fate,
To dwell with Christ and loved ones blest,
Forever in His Home of rest.

Ambassador of God!
The friendless have a friend in thee,
In sickness and in poverty,
Who with compassion strong and deep,
Will give glad services to keep
The sad, the poor, the sick in health,
That they may love the truest wealth.

Ambassador of God!
Thy noble life uplifting all
With high ideals, that Godward call
The soul of man for purpose great,
That we may make a nobler state,
By holy life, and godly aims,
That love of God, and duty claims.

REVERENCE

REVERE the Words of God and Life, In His great Book so grand, so rife With every good of noblest worth, To upbuild man, and bless our earth, With fulness of the perfect man, Fine moulded to the Christ-like plan.

Revere the message that e'er brings Glad tidings of the only things That give the soul its strength divine, To cope with sin, and undermine Its fascination deep and strong, And keeps the soul in virtue long.

Revere religion's mighty aid To make God's will on earth pervade And daily work its blessings fair, In divers ways to meet life's care Of sin, injustice, pain, and woe, That from man's imperfections flow

OBEDIENCE

OBEDIENCE is a law divine!
And in it doth God's glory shine,
When man obeys His just decrees,
And seeks His Maker's will to please,
That Righteousness may have full sway,
To rule our lives in Heaven's way.

Obedience is a law divine!
The nation's laws the man refine,
Ennobling justice, truth, and love,
That good o'er ill may rule above,
And bring to naught the pow'rs ill,
And chaos of the evil will.

Obedience is a law divine!
When duty calls ne'er be supine,
But heedful of the needed task,
To rightly do, nor ever mask
With vain excuses, oft to please
One's selfishness, and love of ease.

THE SOUL'S STRENGTH

O FAITH that steadfast keeps thy gaze Beyond the length of reason's ways, And sees that sight of beauty rare Of the soul's bliss in Heaven fair. O may that Faith forever dwell Within me, that my soul be well!

O Hope that bids the shadows go, Which cloud life's joys with tears and woe, And gives the soul the trustful view Of faith in God, the good, the true. O in my soul increase thy pow'r, That Hope may shine thro' sorrow's hour!

O Charity, thy name is Love, The perfect gift of God above. Thy spirit and thy deeds do bless The sad soul with thy tenderness. O may my soul with fulness be, Of God's majestic Charity!

CONSOLATION

GRIEVE not, O Heart with woe opprest! Let joyous hope grief's way contest, And staunch the burning tears of pain When loved ones die, and life seems vain. O let the Spirit heal thy soul, With visions of Hope's holy goal!

Grieve not, O Heart with woe opprest! When sickness makes thy soul distrest About thy work, and other's needs, Ere weakness stopt thy loving deeds. O He will send the needed aid, If all thy care on Him is laid!

Grieve not, O Heart with woe opprest! As years speed on and bring unrest, And thoughts of sadness, and of fears, That soon will end life's happy years. O welcome that most joyous time Of life with God, in Heaven sublime!

FORGIVENESS

Forgive thy foe that served thee ill!

Passion's heat doth quickly kill

The balance of the sanest mind,

As bitter words bring deeds unkind.

Then heal the wrong with words of love,

That love o'er hate may rule above.

Forgive thy foe that served thee ill! When words that envy doth instil In weak, blind minds that cannot bear Success in which they do not share. Then nobly show the righteous way Of silencing ill words away.

Forgive thy foe that served thee ill!
That cruel wrong that some did will,
Which robbed thee, and brought tears of pain,
And anguish keen of crushed hope's bane.
Then turn thy soul to Him for aid,
That nobleness may never fade!

GENEROSITY

BE generous in deeds of worth, That they enrich, and bless our earth, With righteousness, and works of love, And nobleness from strength above. For by example nobly set, Men gather strength, and deeds beget.

Be generous to all the poor, Whose ills thy kindness may oft cure, By deeds of love, and gifts to gain The famished soul some joy again. For kindly deeds performed with grace, May save some soul from sins most base.

Be generous in giving much
To all who need, and causes such
As God requires for His great plan
Of building nobleness in man,
That soon His Kingdom may appear,
And sin and sorrow disappear.

JUDGMENT

WEIGH well the use of golden time, For worthy use makes life sublime, As moments blest by service good, Replace with joy where evil stood; And happy he who can time mould, Extracting from it all its gold.

Weigh well the choice of thy career, That life's work may thy heart endear, Giving thy talents fullest scope To meet life's needs, and every hope That builds for righteousness and love, Ennobling man for joys above.

Weigh well the truest joys in life, And cleave to those that bring not strife, But peace, joy, love, and godly strength, And greatest happiness at length. For all true joy ennobles soul, And leads to its immortal goal,

TASTE

SEER well the work that suits thee best, And gives thy life its noblest zest, And makes thee feel that it and thee Are in the greatest harmony, For service in life's ample field, That talent may its fulness yield.

Seek well the books which are the best To feed thy soul, and in thy quest Pay heed to none which foul the mind, With worded filth of basest kind. But lend thy ear to words of gold, Inspiring, noble, true, and bold.

Seek well that Faith which is the best To bring content, and joys most blest, In perfectness of Love and Hope, And happiness that now doth ope God's paths of beauty and of grace, That nobleness may sin displace.

TACT

Use well the graceful art of tact! In dealings with your fellows act With highest motives, clothed with grace, That heart in actions may have place To smooth the feelings, and ne'er hurt By carelessness, or manners pert.

Use well the graceful art of tact! In speech or writing be exact, Nor wander in vague, tedious ways In many words that often slays The real point of thy remark, And leaves the hearer in the dark.

Use well the graceful art of tact!
In helping souls to know the fact
That Christ is powerful to save
The sinner, whose ill ways deprave:
Be patient, loving, full of grace,
And God will help thee save the base.

CONCENTRATION

FIRM fix thy thoughts when study needs
Thy whole attention for truth's seeds,
That wisdom may not hampered be,
By negligence of thoughts that flee
From learning's stately ordered round,
To waste their strength in ways unsound.

Firm fix thy will to thy life's plan That strong decision may thee man, And help thee use thy talent well, That its glories may earth's joys swell. So by thy application keen, Shall bring to pass the great unseen.

Firm fix thy aim on noble life, That many gracious acts be rife, Of love, of mercy, and of grace, To bless, uplift, the human race. Then shall thy soul more perfect be, In faith, in hope, and charity.

ADMIRATION

Admire God's majestic power, In all, o'er all, it doth tower; Truly glorious and sublime, Victorious o'er space and time; Immortal master forming all In wondrous ways that shall not fall.

Admire the majesty of Love, Whose sovereignty is from above, Enthroning in the soul of man, A Kingdom of the noblest plan, Which God designed that man might feel His sonship to Himself most real.

Admire the noble lives that give Their services that souls may live In happiness, and peace, and love. Content in serving God above With grateful hearts, and loving deeds, To soothe the pain of human needs.

MANHOOD

BE strong in purpose to excel In thy life's work, that it may swell The glories of God's noble man, Who lives but to complete His plan In fitting works, majestic, grand, That perfectness may bless our land.

Be strong in truth, be kind, be just, Be patient, noble, free from lust, Despising vice in every form, That its foul touch may ne'er deform The beauty of the perfect soul— In grace complete, in good works whole.

Be strong in faith of that grand Hope Which builds true greatness, and doth ope The doors of Heaven's immortal rest, Where souls made perfect shall be blest With harmony of life and love, And fellowship with saints above.

PRINCIPLES

BE true to Honor's noble laws, That thy life may be free from flaws Of conduct false, unworthy, base, Which bring discredit on one's race, And mocks God's great and noble plan, Of ever-growing grace in man.

Be true in thought, in word, in deed, That Righteousness may ever lead Thy life in virtue's paths of peace, And nobleness that shall increase The measure of thy soul's grand wealth Which gives true joy, and perfect health.

Be true to God, be true to man, And that grand Faith which leads the van Of progress true throughout the earth, And gives mankind its second birth In nobleness, and love, and hope, And every good is in its scope.

INFLUENCE

HEED well the power thou dost sway! And use it in the righteous way, That makes for justice, truth, and love, And service good for God above. For only power nobly used, Can cope with sin, and things abused.

Heed well the power thou dost sway! That thy children may thee obey With love, contentment, and good-will, That happiness their lives may fill, With love of God and all things fair, That noble life may be their share.

Heed well the power thou dost sway!
For thou must give account some day
Of all thy talents, words, and deeds,
That they have met God's righteous needs,
And thou for God hast done thy best,
To do His will, that life be blest.

THE WEAKEST LINK

O NEVER be the weakest link!
To urge some soul to ways of drink,
And help one on the downward road
To curse the soul with drink's foul load,
Who falls, but to your charge it be,
The ruined life, and misery.

O never be the weakest link!
To mar some life that it may sink
Deep in the mire of vicious ways,
Which feed on weakness, and e'er slays
The soul's full sov'reignty and pow'r,
That vice may have its evil hour.

O never be the weakest link!
That fears the combat, and doth shrink
From the stern fight for God and Right,
That Truth may ever shed its light
Upon sin's foulness, that e'er slays
True happiness, and noble ways.

PROFANITY

"Swear not at all!" our Saviour said, All filthy words to hell are wed. Then take heed of the havoc wrought By obscene words and impure thought, In youthful lives once innocent, But God-less made as ill words bent.

"Swear not at all!" our Saviour said, Blasphemies show a soul that's dead. Dost thou think words of no account As they to Heaven upward mount? Thou foolish one! thy words are acts That build thy fate as God exacts.

"Swear not at all!" our Saviour said, Speak of God's Name with love and dread, Nor vainly use His sacred Name In heated words, or jest defame, For guiltless thou shalt never be, Whilst careless of profanity.

INTEMPERANCE

HATE thou the drink that lures to hell! Its lovers doth their doom foretell, Who cannot see its fatal sway, Till joy in life has passed away. Then would they leave its foul embrace, But weakness binds them in disgrace.

Hate thou the drink that lures to hell! And foul and frenzied deeds impel, As its poison fires heart and brain, And makes the strongest oft insane, And lures on to some awful deed, That lust and passion fan and feed.

Hate thou the drink that lures to hell! Think of the convict in his cell, Who, but for drink, would now be free To rightly use his liberty, And make this world a nobler place, By keeping from sins mean and base,

GAMBLING

O GAMBLER, shun thy evil ways!
Thy vice destroys, and virtue slays,
And misery soon follows on
The ill course thou art bent upon.
The blasted lives, the ruined homes,
Foretell thy doom when honor roams.

O gambler, shun thy evil ways!
True man ne'er on another preys,
And ruins souls for selfish ends.
The tainted joy that gold's greed sends,
Unmakes the man who is its slave,
And quickly makes that man a knave.

O gambler, shun thy evil ways! God's curse doth rest, and heavy stays On one who wrecks some weak one's life, For lust of gold that makes too rife The liar, thief, and suicide, And good names blast that e'er abide.

IMPURITY

KEEP thy soul pure and lust despise! The sensual vice destroy's life's prize Of holy thoughts and noble deeds, And reaps a harvest off foul seeds, That withers all but vanity, And quickly breeds insanity.

Keep thy soul pure and lust despise! The Holy Spirit's power dies When lust's fierce passion holds its sway, Making the nobler man decay, Sapping the good, the pure, the true, And colors life with its dark hue.

Keep thy soul pure and lust despise! Then shall thy soul with honor rise, As mind and body, hand and brain, Thrill with the life of God again, That overcomes the passion's strife, And gives the soul the Royal Life.

SMOKING

ESCHEW that foul and noxious weed!
That loathsome worms and goats do feed,
Which fouls the breath, and injures sight,
And robs the heart of its full might,
Fouling the air, the clothes, the taste,
Burning money in smoke and waste.

Eschew that foul and noxious weed! Which dirty habits quickly breed, In person, home, and public weal, And makes a nuisance very real, In expectorating acts bad, And smell and dirt to please a fad.

Eschew that foul and noxious weed! Whose mastership doth too oft lead To selfishness, that ever blights The just measure of others' rights, Who have good habits, healthy, clean, And love not pleasures which demean.

TEMPTATION

REPULSE ill thoughts with instant prayer! When evil would thy soul ensnare And sap thy strength with lust and drink, And foul thy soul that it must sink Degraded from its kingly throne, To grieve in darkness, and alone.

Repulse ill thoughts with instant prayer!
When bitter loss would crush with care
Thy sad soul with grief's hopeless thoughts
Of wasted life, and e'er distorts
The truth and worth of noble strife,
And urges thee to end thy life.

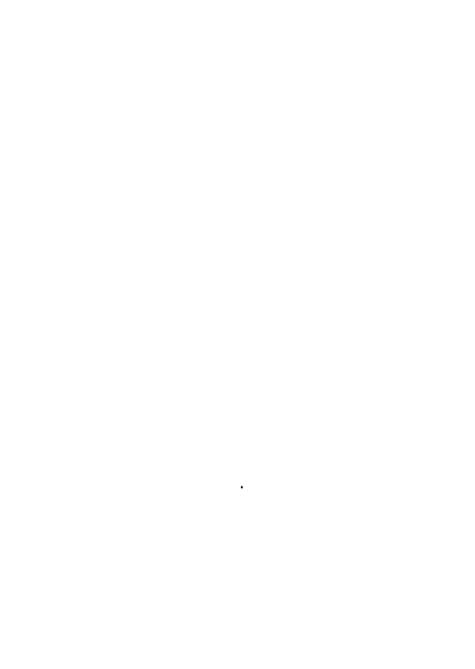

Repulse ill thoughts with instant prayer! When unbelief would make life bare By faithless life, uncheered by hope Of glories, which do ever ope From Faith's firm trust in God's good will To give true Peace, and vanquish ill.

THOUGHT CONQUEST

BE victor in thy realm of thought! That noble actions may be wrought From godly thoughts, unselfish, true, Which strengthen soul with life anew To conquer sin, and Godward strive, With noble life that soul may thrive.

Be victor in thy realm of thought! And ne'er in subtle ways be caught, In arguments to disobey God's holy Laws, that vice may prey Upon man's virtue, and his soul, That passions may attain their goal.

Be victor in thy realm of thought!
And when for its good thou hast fought
And conquered over passions base,
By strength of soul, and God's good grace,
Remember in thy victory,
The greatness of humility.
